HISTORICAL REFERENCE

PLASTIC SNOWBALL BLOSSOMS BY
JOHANN JOACHIM KAENDLER, 1739

(E N)

Everlasting love in porcelain – With a history reaching back nearly 300 years, the Snowball Blossom décor is exemplary of the creativity and artistry of the Meissen Manufactory. In 1739, King Augustus III courted his soon-to-be wife Maria Josepha of Austria with a gift of filigree blossoms crafted from the then newly developed white porcelain. As part of the Royal Blossom series, those delicate buds are given their due reverence once more, newly interpreted in relief to lend the purist design of tableware shape No 41 an intricately detailed texture and visual grace. The collection's exactitude testifies the artisanal perfection of the Meissen Manufactory. The 29 components of the collection are stackable and dishwasher safe.

SUPREME CRAFT SKILLS

The Meissen Manufactory has for centuries been a source of precious objects in „white gold“ that are consummately crafted with loving attention to detail. The snowball blossoms created almost 300 years ago are a perfect example. They have now been alluringly reworked in relief as the Royal Blossom pattern. The new range of tableware, as intricately decorated as it is serviceable, is set to become an everyday companion. The plaster moulds for the service are painstakingly made by hand with the same fastidious care as has always been the case. Their use is restricted to a maximum of 40 castings to ensure that dainty blossoms remain suitably well-defined. Discreetly and harmoniously incorporated into the reliefmoulded design are the Crossed Swords. These have been a byword for exceptionally discerning artistry and handicraft for centuries now – because beauty and perfection are simply matters close to the heart of the Meissen Porcelain Manufactory.
