THE BEAUTY & ELEGANCE OF A LOVE STORY

The most meaningful love stories are taken from life itself. When King Augustus III (1696 – 1763) sought to surprise his wife, Maria Josepha, he knew it had to be a very special gift. And so, in 1739, Meissen's head modeler Johann Joachim Kaendler (1706 – 1775) created the first table service with the famous "Snowball Blossoms" at the behest of the monarch. Almost 300 years later, those venerated blossoms bloom once more as elegant pieces of jewellery – some studded with diamonds – to enchant modern day queens and princesses.

ROYAL BLOSSOM

What the esteemed Kaendler ended up producing would not only consolidate his reputation as a genius of embossing, but also secure the renown of the Meissen Manufactory. To this day, every one of the countless filigree blossoms are shaped by hand, applied to cups, vases, and boxes using a sharp knife, and individually hand-painted. An artisanal perfection upheld at Europe's oldest porcelain manufactory that isn't exclusive to elaborate porcelain objects but can also be admired as precious jewellery.

Inspired by the delicate splendour of the original snowball décor, "Royal Blossom" combines with rose, yellow, and white gold – and in some pieces with fine gemstones – to conquer hearts today with the same beauty and elegance as the original "Snowball Blossoms" did the heart of the young electress. And so, another chapter is added to this everlasting love story...
