HISTORICAL REFERENCE

ONION PATTERN, 1739

(E N)

The time-honored, nearly 300-year-old Onion Pattern is lent new form with Noble Blue, a collection that introduces a sense of lightness to the opulence of the original décor. Classic design elements have been taken up and graphically rearranged on the contemporary tableware shape No 41 while staying true to the pattern's characteristic feature: Meissen's cobalt blue - the manufactory's most meaningful underglaze color, used to paint the almost legendary Onion Pattern since 1739.

Graphic details in bold red along with filigree gold embellishments complete the collection's color palette, setting complementary contrasts and highlighting its distinctive blue. In Noble Blue, a legendary design is reborn in contemporary form.

SUPREME CRAFT SKILLS

Unique, precious and lovingly detailed – properties that, for MEISSEN, are at once a tradition and a commitment. Every single piece decorated in Noble Blue aspires to the same heights of perfection, exclusivity and quality as ever. Two special techniques of porcelain painting are used to this end. First, the famous cobalt-blue paint made in-house at the Meissen Manufactory is finely brushed by hand onto the unglazed porcelain prior to the second firing. MEISSEN is one of the few potteries in the world capable of applying this underglaze painting technique and still employs it today. The paint is rapidly absorbed by the still porous body and is initially dull grey in appearance. The decorative detail only shines forth in gorgeous cobalt blue once the piece has been glazed and has subsequently undergone a final firing at 1,450 degrees Centigrade. Each high-grade porcelain item is then enhanced by hand in red and gilt. Special-purpose inglaze paints are used here that are either brushed on or applied with a steel pen. These paints sink into the glaze slightly during the ensuing decoration firing and gain a degree of protection as a result. The full radiance of the gilded decoration is achieved by subsequently polishing it by hand.
